EPA Targets Air Transport Policy
Doubts In Lieu Of 'Speedy' CSAPR
Ruling

NEW HAVEN, CT -- EPA is aiming to resolve ongoing technical, legal and policy uncertainties over its next air transport policy regardless of whether the Supreme Court takes up its appeal of a ruling that scrapped its Cross-State Air Pollution Rule (CSAPR) because a "speedy" end to the CSAPR legal fight is unlikely, says a top EPA official.

High Court's E15 Suit Seen As Next
'Standing' Test For 'Indirect' Harms

Private parties are looking to pending Supreme Court litigation over EPA's decision approving 15-percent ethanol (E15) fuel as a venue to balance recent rulings on when they have "standing" to contest agency actions based on their indirect or speculative effects, after the justices June 17 sidestepped the issue in a case over Forest Service decisions.
